

What To Do With Fauci

Recent investigations have revealed Anthony Fauci's deplorable and despicable involvement with China and his misleading information with regard to the Covid pandemic.

In light of these revelations of possible wrongdoing, Sen. Rand Paul (KY) has called for Fauci's resignation from the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID). Many people however disagree with this move.

Whether correct or not, there is no doubt that people in the Chinese and our current administration are supporting his involvement with China. Fauci's involvement is treasonous and calling for his resignation, is only a minimal response.

For lesser crimes, the American Medical Association (AMA) has revoked physicians' licenses to practice. They have even done so on a pretense of some guilt. Since there is no pretense as to Fauci's guilt with regard to China and ossification of the American public, the AMA needs to revoke Fauci's medical license.

It may seem mute since Fauci does not actively practice medicine with patients or in any hospitals; the revocation would require him to give up the title Dr, MD, and Doctor of Medicine. This alone changes the narrative with regard to credibility.

Without a public outcry for revocation the AMA will probably not take any action toward Fauci. Over the years the AMA has consistently "protected" its members with only a small number of revocations.

Additionally, there would be no doubt that the current administration would step in to thwart such a move.